

Have you chosen your Minor?

Political Science	A minor in Political Science exposes students to a wide array of interesting political topics. Minors take introductory courses in American politics, comparative politics, and international relations, and then have the choice of five elective courses in any area of political science they choose.
Leadership Studies	The leadership studies minor is a multidisciplinary program designed to provide opportunities to study leaders and leadership concepts that are applicable to leadership in a variety of contexts. The leadership studies minor complements any academic major and provides formal learning experiences that can be supplemented by additional campus and community leadership experiences as part of the leadership development process.
Comparative Government & International Relations	A minor in Comparative Government and International Relations allows students to explore the dynamics of politics around the world. Students take introductory courses on comparative politics and international relations and then have the choice of six additional course, which include topics such as Middle Eastern politics, International law, War, terrorism, and European and African Politics.
Public Administration	A minor in public administration introduces students to how government operates and what government does. Students enroll in introductory courses in public policy and public administration and then go on choose five courses from Political Science, Geography, Planning, and Psychology. Many students who complete the minor in public administration go on to enroll in the Master of Public Administration program and become professional administrators working in federal state, or local government.
